MISS MATTY:

Because you gave yourself wholly and patiently to making actual the dream of another, we know the beauty of a life consecrated to a great ideal.

Because, when convinced that you were right, you stood unmoved by criticism and condemnation, we know the dignity of true conviction.

Because you constantly put self aside and when convinced that you were wrong, unhesitatingly reversed your own decisions, we know the beauty and strength of true humility.

And because you are yourself, we know how exquisite is genuine simplicity and truth.

Do you realize that not only has this strength, this simplicity, this dignity, this consecration, been wrought into the very fabric of our college, but that it has lighted every girl and every teacher who has been a part of your Hollins, and has gone wherever they have labored in the world?

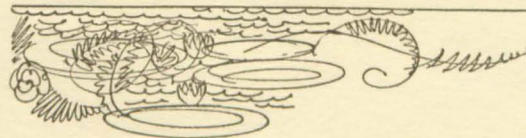

Because a deep sincerity is yours, it is more surely ours. It is, then, from the heart that we say:

We love you, Miss Matty, and we thank you.

THE COLLEGE

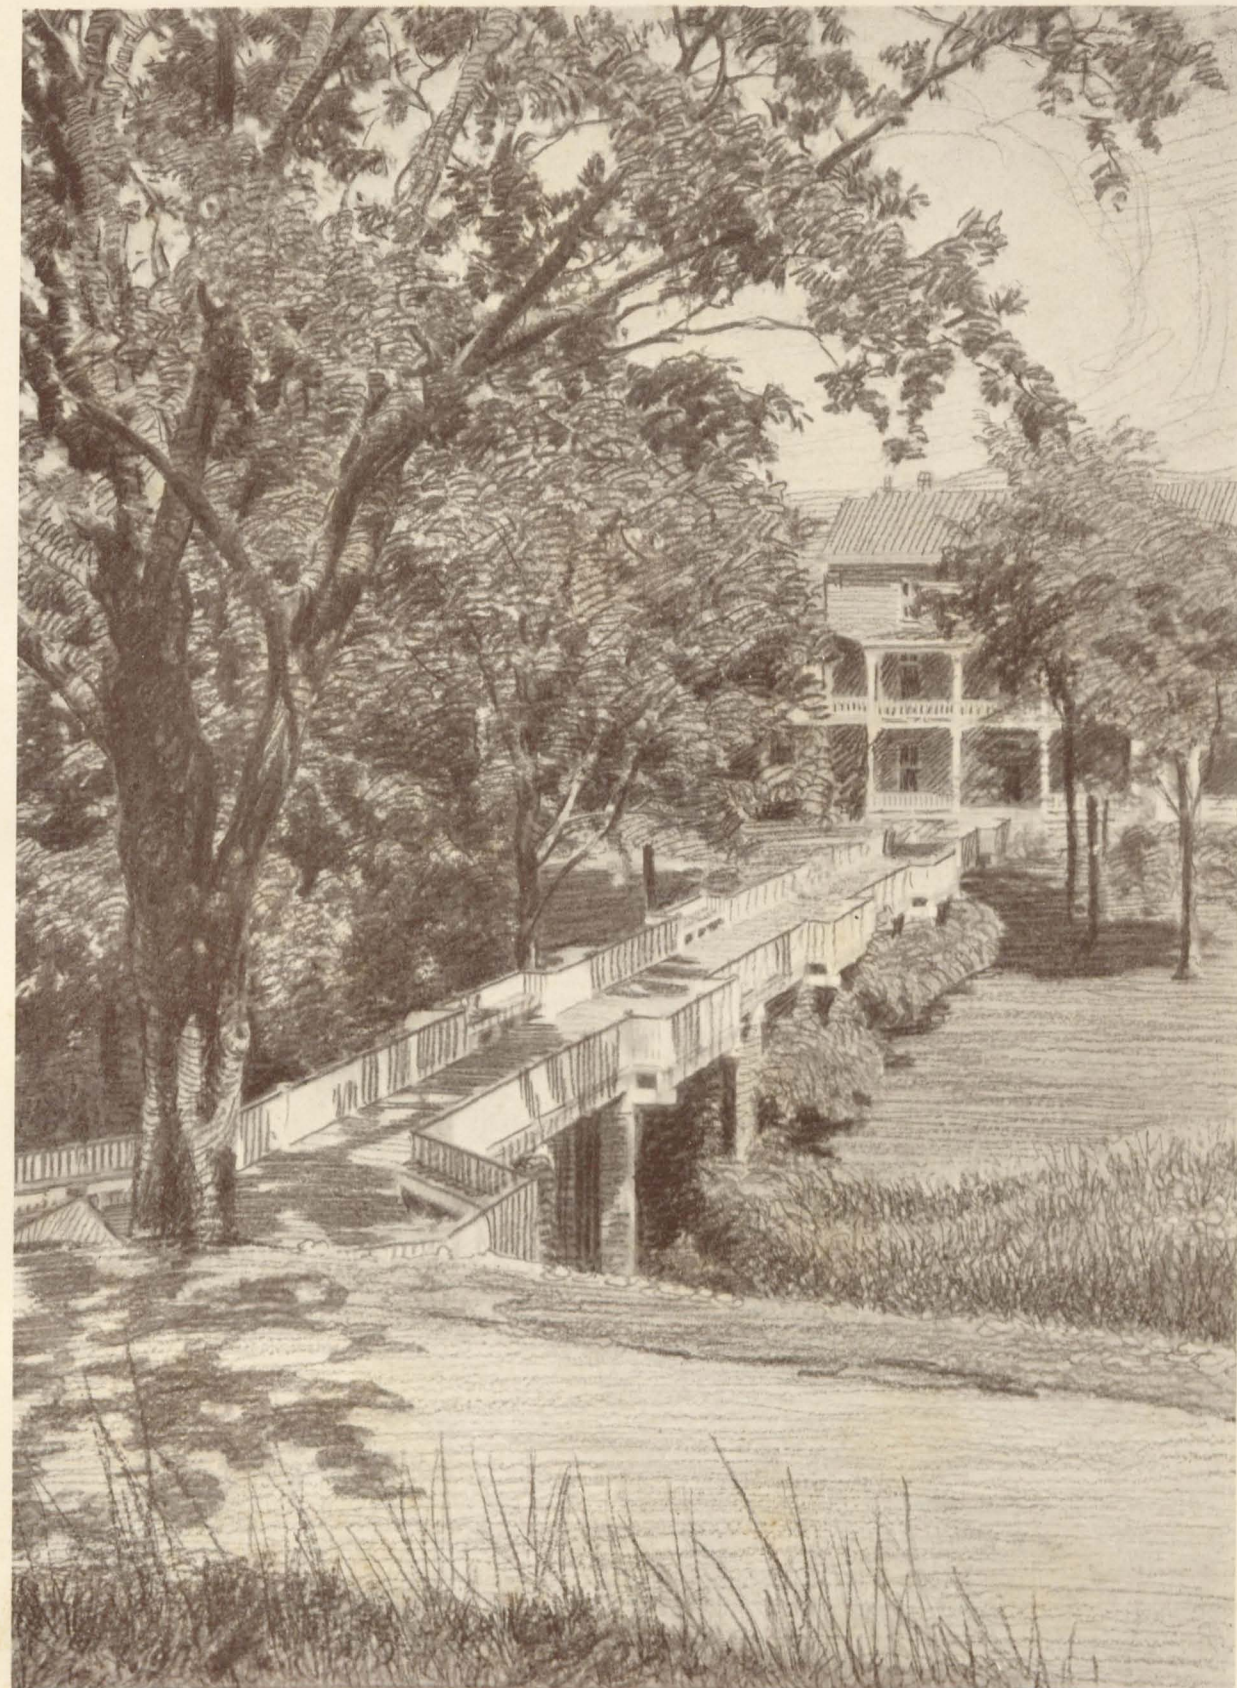

MAIN BUILDING

*The Green Room, long remembered for Sunday dates and teas,
Co-ordinates with Keller, Elysian fields of ease.*

THE INFIRMARY

*Aches and pains of all descriptions—headaches, colds and falls—
File in feeble, frail procession down these quiet halls.*

WEST BUILDING

*This used to be the old Hotel, where visitors once ranged,
From Lafayette to Henry Clay—Would you say times have changed?*

THE LITTLE THEATRE

*Remember the Fashion Show? Quality Street? Lectures? Recitals? The Nutcracker Suite?
A diploma, the Bonfire, the mid-summer heat must be added to make recollections complete.*

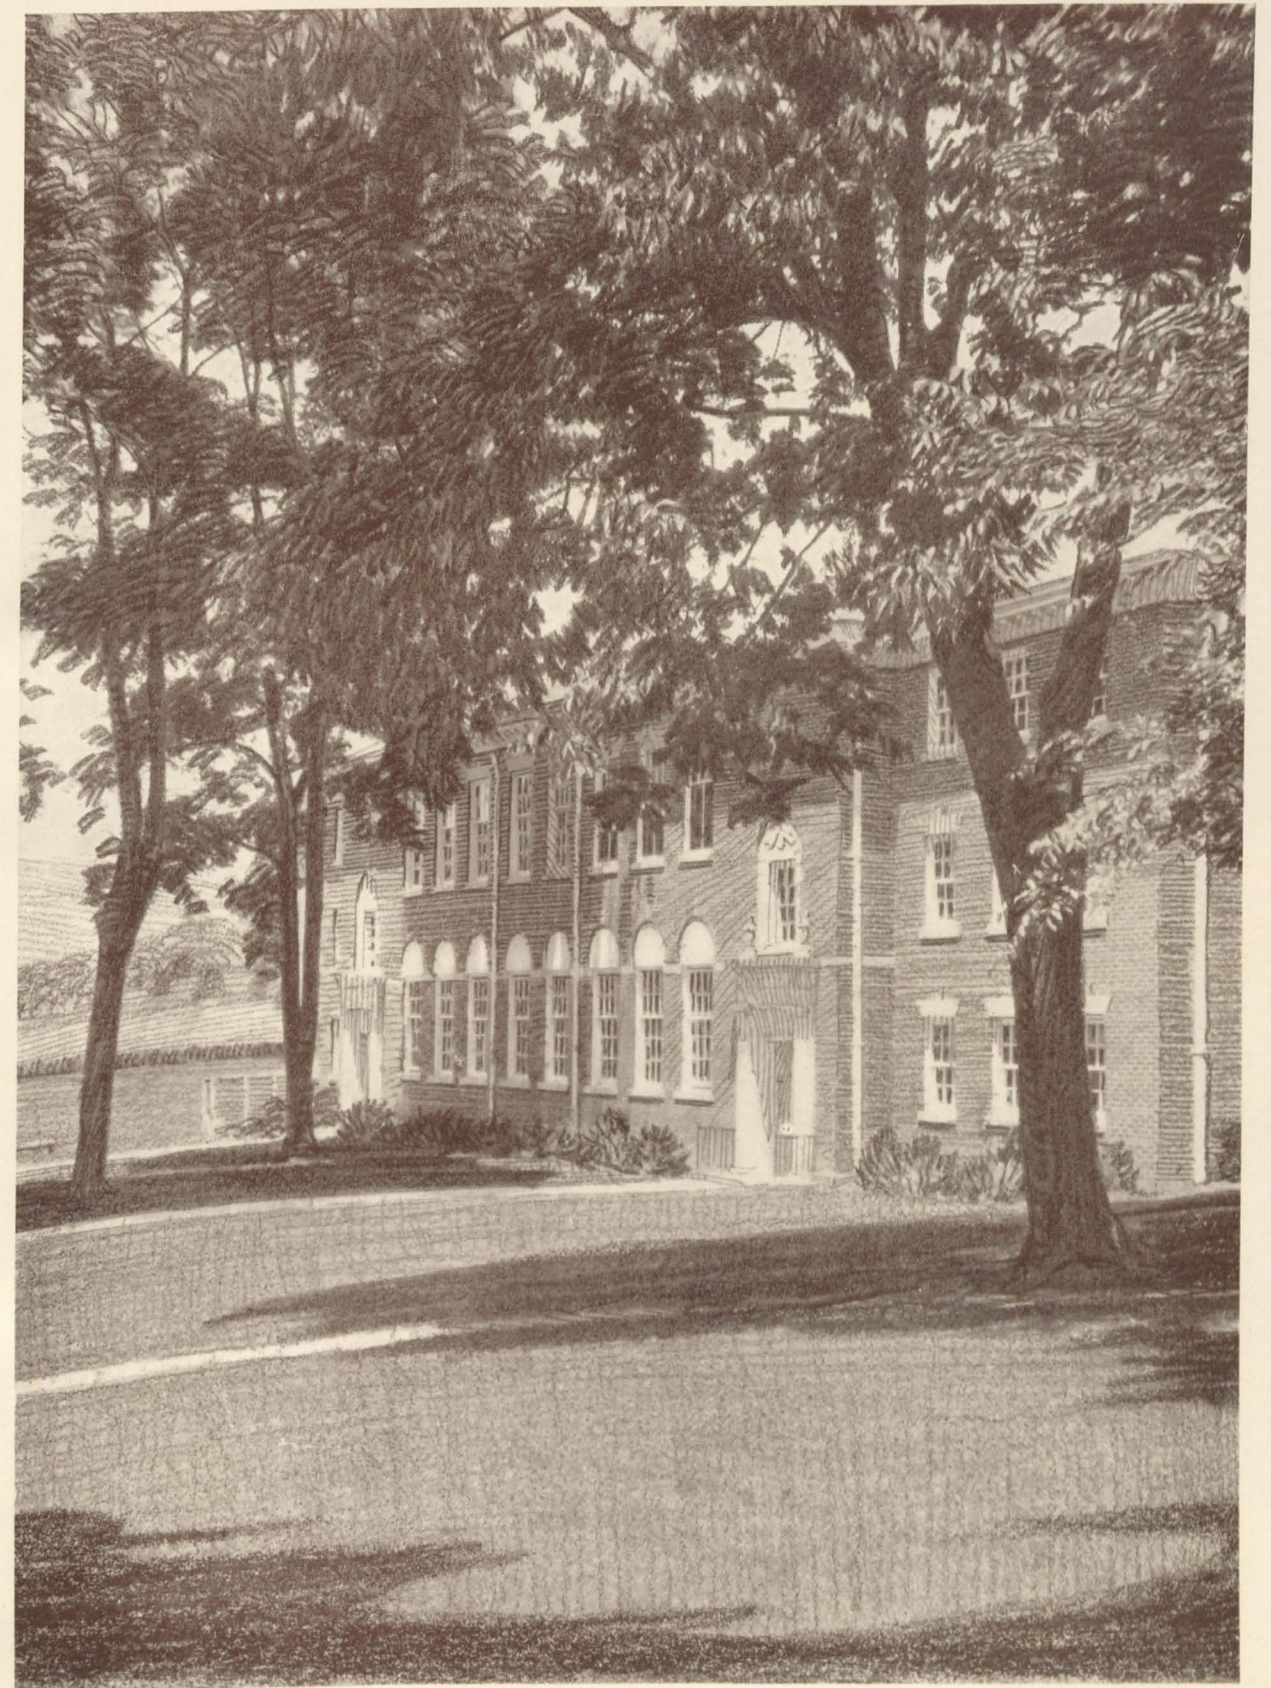

CARVIN HOUSE

*Steep is the path to knowledge; wisdom lives above;
Bright burns the lamp of learning; rich the rewards thereof.*

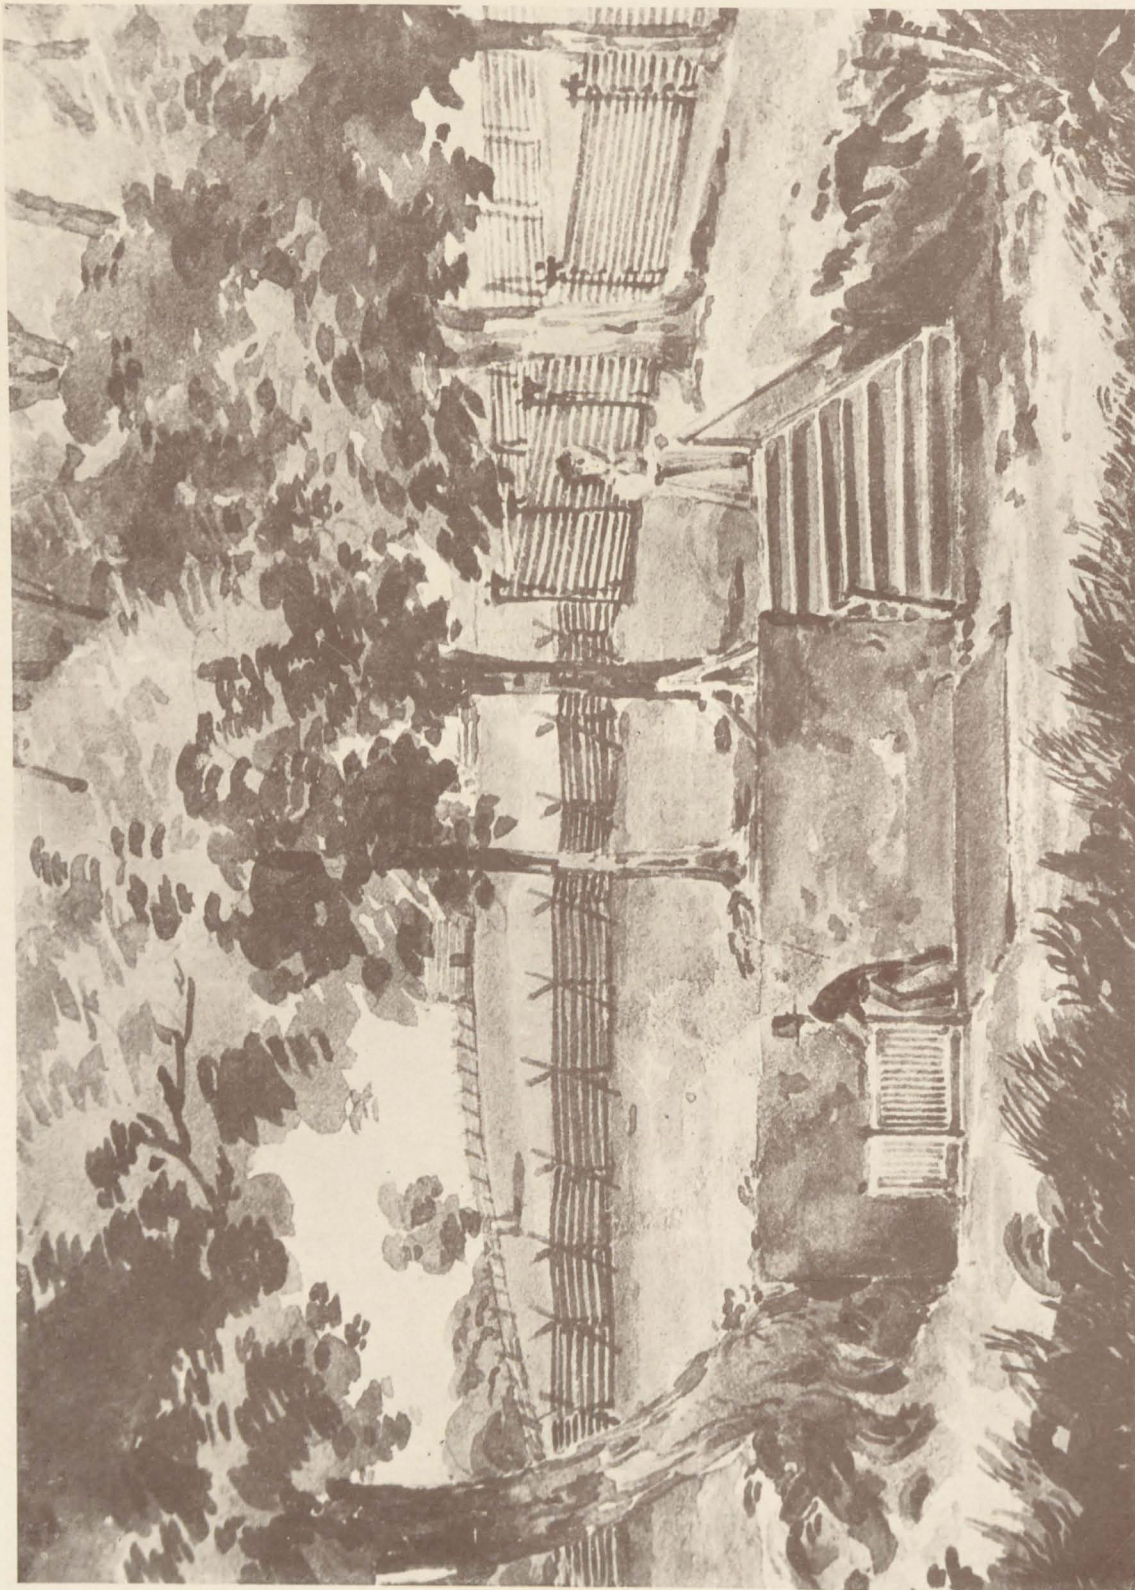

TINKER MOUNTAIN

*From sincere soil; yet above other hills has she sprung.
To show us below we must grow while we're young—while we're young.*

PRESSER MUSIC HALL

*Pianos and voices in greatest profusion;
The home of the Muses in utter confusion.*

THE SULPHUR SPRING

In the Spring romantic fancies Nature's calls have long obeyed, Lingering by this fragrant fountain the depths of Arden's shade.

The Springs of Hollins

By MARY PARMENTER

Because certain small springs of water never ceased to flow out of the earth in a pleasant forest near a Great Road, along which passed pioneers who were to make a new world beyond certain mountains, there grew up about these sources a cluster of friendly buildings. Here dwelt gentle people who lived good lives. Along the Great Road came sojourners who drank of the small springs which never ran dry, and after a time traveled on refreshed. These told others of these welling waters. New pilgrims came, and old ones often returned to drink, and yet the springs sufficed. For the wells were old and yet the waters were new.

Nor was this a new thing, but a wonder long known to prophets and poets in their divers times and places. Where there were tiny springs of sweet water, there the children of the desert found life in abundance as if by the rivers of Paradise. Upon a steep hill called Helicon the winged horse Pegasus struck once with his ringing hoof and out flowed the clear water of Hippocrene, the well of the Nine Muses; not yet is it exhausted. The gods of the "main sea deep" know that the rivers flowing into their great demesnes come from the heart of the earth, from the small ever-sacred springs, and that the green-bearded river gods with their flowing urns, the sweet nymphs of the fountains with their echoing voices, are of like deity with them. Their interpreters, the poets, have always so sung and said, whether on bright Parnassus, or in the dim forests of Logres and of Lyonesse, or beside some Well at the World's End. Indeed those poets whom we call "of the Renaissance" were so well aware of this above-mentioned marvel of the new water from old wells, and likewise of another, that of old water out of new wells, that they scrupled nothing to announce boldly the arrival of the aforesaid Nine Muses in the small isles of Britain, and even, by way of prophecy, that they would preside over new Pierian springs of art and learning in the western world called Virginia. This was a true prophecy. Fulfilled in part, and still in process of unfolding, it shows us even now all that certain great explorers of the realms of gold were able to find out. For when, as we recall, the sapient Prince Pantagruel and his wise and merry company quench their burning thirst for knowledge, the oracle at the holy well gave them at last but the one word: "Drink!" And they came to the waters.

Much virtue, then, may be found in small springs if they are the everflowing ones frequented by those who truly thirst. But to drop our riddles, and speak in simple sooth of Hollins: it is true that many generations have here found sources of inspiration and strength for which the little springs of sulphur and limestone water, so far-renowned in the past, may serve as symbols, but which themselves have a higher reality, unique in each individual experience. The true springs of Hollins are the people who have taught, and learned, and lived their lives here, "simple and earnest and daring, friendly, and quiet and true." Around them clusters what we call the college, to them return the travelers; and in each generation of students are to be found new springs of Hollins like unto the old, while yet the old remain.

A Prophecy

'Tis Centennial Day, a time of great fun
To recollect some of the things we have done.
A Colonial motif prevails o'er the day
As Alumnae gather on campus to play.

The first to arrive is Economist Backs,
Who's keeping this Socialist state on the tracks;
A stove, some curtains, wastebaskets, and light,
And Government theories will work out all right.

Bagenstose, Social reformer supreme,
Hurries from work and her Middletown dream
And only this week-end she got two new cases
For moving the slums to the wide open spaces.

After her little Bandy rises to view
She's famed for her songs and her Poetry too.
Within every house in city and town
Her sayings are quoted—so great's her renown.

Jean Bird follows after, her Music in hand,
For Recitals and Concerts she's much in demand.
The Philharmonic claims most of her days,
And critics are quick in voicing her praise.

In Grand Central Station, where wheels of life turn,
The Traveler's Aid Bureau has claimed Lillian Burns.
Be they lost, strayed, or stolen, or hunting a bus
Lil handles the crowd as she once handled us.

And Ellie Cadbury, our goat raising lass,
Is gamboling gleefully over the grass.
"Nice pasture," she says, "for my little Swiss Nannie."
Her knowledge of goats is really uncanny.

Erma Cook follows, exclusive Modiste.
(Creations a hundred and fifty at least.)
Sophisticate tastes she answers with ease,
In size number twelve, but grown-up if you please.

Persis arrives in blazes of glory,
Reporters are crowding around for her story.
With the Crowell electron, her latest sensation,
She has upset the Physics of a whole generation.

Dorothy Donovan travels for fun.
She'll tell you wild stories of things she has done.
We begin to suspect from the things we have heard,
That she's planning her next trip with Admiral Byrd.

Then Francis Elkins comes next into sight,
With "Oxfords" observing that all is just right.
She arranges interiors, makes them look new,
And takes pride in her work as the best artists do.

At last Mary Fletcher streams on to the scene,
Of the Cambridge Fire Fighters Battalion she's Queen.
For the practise she gained in her young college days
Has made her an expert in fighting a blaze.

Juliet Gentile comes sauntering in,
With a menacing chuckle, a sinister grin.
She has in her hand about ten dollars worth
Of the stuff she has made to blow up the earth.

We find Sara Gilliam has bought an estate,
And has hung a big sign on the tree by the gate,
Which says, "Transients Welcome. Good Will to all Men.
Free Shelter and Food at 'Ye Reste a While Inn'."

Here comes Evelyn Greever, whose name is in lights,
The star of countless first nights.
For several years she has been on the stage,
And on Broadway her roles are the popular rage.

The research Librarian, Dede Hancock,
Has volumes of notes under burglar-proof lock.
The answer to anything students might ask
She has found and compiled—a stupendous task.

Pat Johnson comes riding up on her black steed.
In Blue Grass Kentucky she's taken the lead.
She owns thoroughbreds of all colors and sizes,
Which win all the races and take all the prizes.

Now Susannah Jones, Philosophy's child,
Is driving the critics incurably wild.
Her latest pet theory, which baffles the sharks,
Is a wholly new outlook on Mr. Karl Marx.

Here's Adria Kellogg, the coach of fast teams,
Everyone knows of her victories, it seems.
For in Hockey and Swimming, and Basketball, too,
She has earned all the praises one could ever hope to.

Here comes Totsy Kelly whose "good morning voice"
Causes many a Radio fan to rejoice.
Her fame has spread quickly, and soon she expects
To be head announcer at W. R. B. X.

Then Peggy MacDowell, the public admires
For training its singers and leading its choirs.
The practise she had on the ditties at college
Has stood her good stead as a basis of knowledge.

Janice Marshall decided that "doing her part"
Meant living her life of devotion to art.
Now her eccentric drawings may always be seen
On the covers of all the best magazines.

Mason is posing. Her favorite ad
Is, "Be nonchalant, now, and light a Murad."
The big advertisers are always upset,
It's the lass from Kentucky they're trying to get.

Then here's Charis McElroy, piano teacher,
Fond mammas to teach their children beseech her.
So fine is her method that her studio door
Is crowded by pupils who come back for more.

Myrtle Mizell's still collecting statistics
In Y. W. work and she's most optimistic.
These numbers to her their deep secrets reveal
From numbers of workers to the price of a meal.

Jane Moon follows after, the Doctor's best friend.
Her beauty ideas seem never to end.
Her latest invention is now quite the style:
It makes the eyebrows stay up for awhile.

Here is Jane Plitt, who has started a school.
Two week-ends a week is the first general rule.
In travel and study her leisure is spent—
She's thinking of running for Vice-President.

Our Mathematician, Marie Prendergast,
Controls all the numbers from first to the last.
She's left Mr. Einstein so far in the rear
That he plans to withdraw in her favor, I hear.

We thought we had seen this World Brotherhood
Crashing around us as fast as it could.
Now Pruitt controls the affairs of the Nation
And we are all on three hundred and sixty-five day vacations.

Advice "to the lovelorn," a sign, bids you go
To a secluded corner of Keller below
Where troubles and heartaches you're welcome to tell
To the popular columnist—Emma Purcell.

Behind us in haste comes Adelaide Rawles,
"I'm devoted to this," across campus she calls.
Adelaide now has a lab of her own
Where specialists study on tissue and bone.

Philosopher Raynolds comes down from the hills
To buy a few groceries and pay a few bills.
With the ills of us humans she's quite sympathetic,
Tho' we can't see the joys of being ascetic.

Hertha Rottszeiper, the gayest of all.
Soon lost all her newly acquired Southern drawl.
She's doing translations in Hindu and Greek,
And teaching Herr Hitler three days a week.

Beth Rowlett, now, has quite gone mad;
It's the biggest surprise we ever had.
From midnight to dawn she may be seen
As New York's favorite Night Club Queen.

Margaret Smith has just landed on high,
She's President now of the National "Y."
She's planning to travel to many strange places
Converting the Heathen to Y-conscious races.

Essays on art that was Dicken's and Sterne's,
The Poetic theories of Shelley and Burns,
Shakespearian Drama; The Ancient Greek Myth;
With Notes and Appendix by Nan Cook Smith.

In the field of Fine Arts we discover Jean Staples,
Her famous Academy founded at Naples,
Has left Mussolinis and Popes in a stew—
She knows so much more than they ever hope to.

Here's Helen Stephenson, the humorous child,
Whose collections of jokes many hours have beguiled.
She now has a new volume fresh from the press—
The point of the jokes we leave you to guess.

Quiet Jane Trimble, the aviatrix,
Has startled the Nation with her daring tricks.
Before her skilled flying all speed records crash
As she crosses the continent—quick like a flash.

Waterhouse, now, is the hit of the season
In Musical circles, and we know the reason.
Tho' she specially asked that no one should say
That she got her first start in a cheap cabaret.

Eleanor Webb always wanted to dance,
But she couldn't forget how she loved the poor tramp.
She's discovered a way she can answer both calls,
Now she's headline performer at Charity Balls.

Courtney West works in a very strange field,
Yet splendid results her endeavors do yield.
She teaches Blues singers to dance as they croon,
And these fancy tricks really add zest to the tune.
